

Marx. Freedom.

S 37₁

410

"Freedom is in no mind the essence of man that even its opponents realize it... No man fights freedom; he fights not for the freedom of others. Every kind of freedom has therefore always existed, only at one time as a special privilege, another time as a universal right."

Modern industry is forced, "under the penalty of death, to replace the mere fragment of man, "by the fully developed individual, fit for a variety of labors ready to face any change of production, as & from the different social functions he performs, as but so many notes of giving free scope to an individual acquired powers."

"Beyond its [necessity] begins that development of human power which is its own end. The true realm of freedom, which, however, can flourish only upon the realm of necessity as its basis. Restoring the working day is its fundamental premise."
